

Consultation on proposed improvements to Station Street

Nottingham City Council is consulting on proposals to pedestrianise part of Station Street (between Trent Street and Carrington Street) as the first stage of wider proposals to improve the environment around the station and links to the city centre.

The proposed works would significantly improve the streetscape along the north side of Nottingham Station, complementing its recent £60m upgrade. They would also tie in with wider plans to enhance the approach to the city centre from the station, including improvements to Carrington Street, Collin Street and better entrances to an improved Broadmarsh shopping centre and car park. Among the proposed improvements are:

- Pedestrianising Station Street between Trent Street and Carrington Street – removing all parking
- Moving taxis from Station Street to a new taxi rank in the station car park, as agreed with the Hackney Association and East Midlands Trains
- Prohibiting vehicles except buses and cycles from using Carrington Street outside the station
- Prohibiting vehicles except cycles entering Station Street from London Road
- Providing vehicle access to the remaining section of Station Street through a one-way gyratory system from London Road to Canal Street, Trent Street onto Station Street
- Increasing parking available on Trent Street and Station Street (east of Trent Street)

A proposed continuous pedestrianised paved area would include the whole width of the existing pavements and roads, as used elsewhere to successfully calm traffic speeds and create spaces where pedestrians are safely given priority. The layout will be flexible to accommodate different needs, give options for café sitting out areas and other uses to activate the whole area. The relocation of taxis onto the second floor of the multi-storey station car park would be complemented by clear signs in the station and allow easy, same level covered access from the new concourse.
